2013 Congressional Voting Record

THE 113TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION: THE FEVER DIDN'T BREAK.

During the 2012 campaign, President Obama argued that if he was reelected, Republicans in Congress would finally be forced to accept his presidency and his mandate to effect moderate but substantial economic and social change. He referred to it as “breaking the fever” of GOP obstructionism.

ADA's 2013 Congressional Voting Record shows Republicans are still a fevered opposition. GOP Senators on average backed the progressive legislation tracked in this report just 9% of the time; Republicans in the House as a whole voted only 4% of the time on the right side of the issues. Once again ADA salutes 12 true liberals in the Senate and 14 in the House who earned 100% on ADA's top issues.

Every year since 1948, ADA has produced what has become the standard gauge of Congressional ideology. Members are rated on a collection of 20 votes from the previous year that span the legislative spectrum from economic policy to social issues to foreign affairs. Ever since the mid-'60s, the two parties have diverged, with the Democratic Party becoming more consistently progressive, the Republicans more absolutely reactionary. However, our selected votes have also made clear each year that not all Democrats are liberal, and not all Republicans are reactionary. Sadly, in recent years Moderate Republican ranks have dwindled, so compromise has become less and less feasible. In fact, for right-wing Republicans, compromise, which is essential to a functioning democracy, has become a dirty word.

Though President Obama and the Democrats continued to offer compromises, reactionary GOP absolutism led to more legislative stalemate in 2013, both on Capitol Hill and between Congress and the White House. The Republican-controlled House of Representatives continued to prove it would rather make points than policy, refusing to move on important legislation passed by the Democratic-majority Senate and finally pushing its Tea-Party-fueled extremism all the way to a 16-day government shutdown in October.

In the Senate, the

but the ability of a determined minority to block legislation continues.)

How we raise and spend our money continued to dominate the public agenda, just as it has ever since Republicans captured the House of Representatives in 2011. Many of the votes in this year's report are on budgets: both the overall government fiscal plan and specific expenditures such as for food stamps (SNAP) and the Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program. In general, Democrats were trying to loosen restrictive spending limits—the so-called “sequester”—that have impaired safety-net programs and hobbled public investments, while Republicans were trying (mostly successfully) to keep the screws tight by refusing to consider any options for raising revenue to meet national needs. Only the budgets proposed by the House Progressive Caucus reflected ADA's values for addressing the Nation's needs.

Other old battles raged on as well. Republicans continued their unrelenting attack the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare)—the October government shutdown grew out of one more GOP attempt to eviscerate the law. How to balance safety and civil liberties in a post-9/11 world was another familiar issue that—unusually in these hyper-partisan times—actually split party ranks, with national-security-obsessed Democrats siding with most Republicans, while libertarian-minded Republicans were voting with liberal Democrats.

Republicans continued their decades-long attack on public health and safety oversight, attempting to undermine regulations aimed at safer financial investments, more wholesome food, and cleaner air.

At times, progress seemed possible. In the Senate, hopes were initially high that not only the 2012 elections (which, contrary to predictions, actually widened the Democratic majority) but, more viscerally, the tragic school shooting in Newtown, CT, would finally clear the way for sensible gun safety legislation. But here again, the hammerlock of the gun lobby on members of both parties in Congress persisted, moderate legislation was stymied, and America's gun violence crisis was allowed to continue unabated.

The Senate did manage to pass a first good step towards comprehensive immigration reform. But the House turned its back on 30 million hard-working, undocumented immigrants and the chance to fix a dysfunctional immigration system that hurts us all, recent arrival and native-born alike.

This voting record is offered only as a guide in judging the legislative performance of Members of Congress (MOC), and has several inherent limitations. It is no measure of a legislator's work in committee. It does not reflect the failure of Congress to deal with major issues, or the individual's degree of responsibility. It does not reflect a legislator's lifetime of work.

The methodology of the ADA Voting Record calls for Members who miss a vote, for whatever reason, to be penalized in their final score. Therefore, a Member who agreed with ADA's position on 19 votes but was absent on the 20th would receive a score of 95%.
